

Give Your Plants This Special Advantage, And Watch Them Grow Happily

Here's why B-Vitamin Supplementation Could Be Your Key To A Great Harvest

The problem with leaving your plants to make vitamins on their own is: not only do they have to spend precious time and energy doing it, but they're only programmed to make specific kinds of vitamins in specific amounts. If you want them to have every advantage, to truly grow to their full potential, then you'll need a well-designed vitamin supplement.

The solution?

Pour in a dose of B-52 B-Vitamin Supplement from Advanced Nutrients.

The math is simple. The more time and energy your plants spend making vitamins, the less time and energy they spend using vitamins. Which means they're not growing as big and heavy as they could be. Not only that, but our scientists have tested different combinations and ratios of vitamins in side-by-side grows of clones. They did this to find out, in the real world, what works and what doesn't.

B-52 works. Plain and simple.

Here's how: There's a lot going on in B-52, but here are the three major players:

1. Folic acid – which helps your plant maintain a healthy metabolism and DNA. But the problem with relying on your plants to produce this is that it breaks down too easily, especially under intense lighting. Best to supplement this one.
2. Vitamin B5 – critical for basic cellular processes.
3. And B1 – or Thiamine – helps your plants create and use carbohydrates, so they have the energy they need. B1 affects everything from essential oil production to Systemic Acquired Resistance, which is a fancy way of saying your plants are responding very well to the challenges in their environment. Last, B1 helps your root development substantially, so your plants can take in nutrients faster, and are more resistant to shock, transplanting and cloning.

Our team of plant scientists have spent a long time testing clones side-by-side to come up with this formula. And when they couldn't get one more milligram out of the flowers they were growing, they knew they'd arrived.

But don't take our word for it. See for yourself how easy it is, and don't risk a single penny.

Christopher Netzer "Been using B-52 for many years! A kick ass product from germination through mid flowering! Can't recommend it enough just like the phenomenal voodoo juice! I'm still used to the old school 2+ formula, and now they keep making the products easier to use."

HydroHerb "Advanced Nutrients products are a lot stronger than anything else I've ever seen or heard of so you're not really comparing 1L to 1L. You have to account for the final volume of solution it makes. For my money it's completely worth it. I get more yield, better quality bud, and a grow with little to no problems. It actually costs me less to grow with AN when you add it all up."

g13laze "I'm using B-52 right now. I apply twice a week and have been since week 1. I'm now into week 2 flowered and all I can say is: B-52 ROCKS! I'm just following the directions on the bottle. I plan on continuing to apply twice a week up until the 2nd or 3rd week from harvest. Good Stuff."
